The Nature of the Treatment: Therapy

Benefits of Therapy

Therapy can help a person to gain new understanding about his or her problems and learn new ways of coping with and solving problems, such as anxiety, anger, depression, parenting or relationship concerns. Therapy can help a person to develop new skills and to change behaviour patterns. Therapy can contribute to an improved ability to cope with stress and difficult situations and can increase understanding of self and others.

Risks of Therapy

We acknowledge that, Dr. Sherri Bruce has advised me that while there are potential benefits to therapy, there is no guarantee of success and that there are potential risks. We have been advised that during counselling emotions and memories may be stimulated which can evoke strong feelings and that changes in awareness may alter my self-perceptions and ways of relating to others. We have been advised that the process of personal change can be varied and individual.

We, _____, & _____ understand that it is important that we mention promptly any concerns or questions to Dr. Sherri Bruce that we may have at any time during the process of therapy.

Sessions

A session usually lasts one hour –sometimes longer. During a session, we will focus on specific issues and work directly at getting solutions using one or using all three theoretical approaches – Solution Focused, Cognitive Behavioural or Gottman Therapy.

We understand that the frequency of sessions and length of treatment will be discussed and are guided by the needs and desires of clients. Many issues or concerns can be addressed in 10 – 12 sessions. Some clients may wish to pursue longer term therapy based on their specific needs and/or goals. Other clients may wish to limit their therapy to 1 to 3 sessions to gain insight and develop strategies in addressing their concerns due to the goal of therapy or to limited funding issues.

Therapy Strategies

We understand that Solution Focused therapy is an approach to psychotherapy based on solution-building rather than problem-solving. It explores current resources and future hopes rather than present problems and past causes and typically involves only three to five sessions.

We understand that Cognitive Behavioural therapy can be effective to deal with emotional and behavioural problems. The word “cognitive” means “to know” or “to think”. Therefore, cognitive therapy is exploring your thoughts to understand how you feel and to explain what you do. Cognitive therapy explores the underlying thoughts, beliefs, and values that influence your perceptions that influence your feelings and behaviour.

Gottman Method Couples Therapy

We understand that the Gottman Method was developed by Dr. John Gottman and his wife Dr. Julie Schwartz Gottman in the 1980s. It is an evidence-based form of couple's therapy that strives to assist couples in achieving a deeper sense of understanding, awareness, empathy, and connectedness within their relationships that ultimately leads to heightened intimacy and interpersonal growth. By combining therapeutic interventions with couple's exercises, this type of therapy helps couples identify and address the natural defenses that hinder effective communication and bonding.

Gottman Method Couples Therapy begins with an assessment process that then informs the therapeutic framework and intervention. An initial session might look like this:

Assessment: Individual interviews with each partner are conducted, followed by a joint assessment of the couple.

Therapeutic Framework: The couple and therapist decide on the frequency and duration of the sessions.

Therapeutic Interventions: An analysis of couple conflict is one example of a therapeutic intervention. The couple enacts a recent conflict and through observation, the therapist identifies the strengths and problems and implements interventions that aim to improve the couple's communication. The therapist assists the couple in effectively repairing the conflict.

Goals and Principles of the Gottman Method

The principle goals of the Gottman Method Couples Therapy are to disarm conflicting verbal communication, increase intimacy, respect, and affection, remove barriers that create a feeling of stagnancy in conflicting situations, and create a heightened sense of empathy and understanding within the context of the relationship.

Disclosure: While I have taken the training in the Gottman Method of couple's therapy and have become a Certified Gottman Therapist, I want you to know that I am completely independent in providing you with clinical services and I alone am fully responsible for those services. The Gottman Institute or its agents have no responsibility for services you receive.

You may be asked to complete some tasks between sessions.

Confidentiality and Limits of Confidentiality

Your sessions are entirely confidential according to the code of ethics of the College of Psychologists of British Columbia. The only legal/ethical exceptions to confidentiality are as follows:

- When a minor is at risk of abuse or neglect, and is unable to seek support and assistance
- When clients are at risk of imminent serious harm to themselves or others
- When you disclose that you have a condition which makes it dangerous to drive, and continues to drive after being warned of the danger
- When you disclose you have an unreported communicable disease
- If the court orders the disclosure of client records
- When there is a request from the College of Psychologists during an investigation or a registration matter,
- If another licensed health care professional might be a danger to the public if he or she continues to practice (e.g., engaged in sexual conduct).
- When a client discloses that there has been cumulative stress, harassment or bullying in their workplace.

My clinical policy:

- “Keeping secrets” policy: Sometimes, one couple shares something (e.g., secret bank account or affair) that the other partner is not aware of with the therapist. I will NOT share your confidence with your partner but WILL insist that you share it. I will help you prepare; we will explore together your fears about what might happen if your partner learns the truth, and I will support you through this in a compassionate way. Believe it or not, sharing hard stuff is where a lot of the possibility for righting your relationship lives. When we are keeping secrets from our partners, it is a block to our ability to be open and intimate. The tensions that might arise when you share the secret may be necessary tensions to help you and your partner see each other more clearly.

We have been advised by Dr. Sherri Bruce that all communications and all records relating to the provision of psychological services to us are confidential and may not be disclosed without our written consent _____ & _____ (Clients’ initials).
